with the question in the abstract, popular sovereighty is a practical fact. The people of the Territories feel that they have a right to exercise it, if we may judge of their feelings from their acts; and, indeed, it would be a hard case, if it should be required that, no matter how much opposed ninety-nine hundreths of the people of a Territory might be to the establishment of slavery among them, it might, nevertheless, be established, and no rower could avert it, so long. established, and no power could avery by as they remained in the Territorial condition. But the truth is, the question is no longer a living question—it has no vitality in it, and this the South ought to see. Slavery will go into just such territory as is made congenial to it by climate and productions. It cannot go into Nebraska nor Dacotab, nor into divers others of the Territories—future States—which are being pushed upon us with indecent haste—and this the South and the slaveholding States ought to see and admit.

At Wooster some eight or ten thousand people were awaiting the train, the arrival of which, with its distinguished passenger, was greeted with a national salute, the waving of banners, the music of three or four bands and the huzzas of thousands. From the depot to the speaker's stand, a mile distant, he was followed by at least ten thousand people. The windows of the build-ings along the streets were filled with ladies, who saluted the distinguished statesman with the waving of hardkerchiefs, which Judge Douglas gracefully acknowledged. Las and the doctrine of non-intervention:

Douglas stood just where he was in 1848, 1850, and 1855. He (Toombs) had differed with Cass in his views of squatter sovereignty.

The principle of non-intervention had all departments of the government in its favor; as for the future he was willing to leave the question where it is, under the protection of the Constitution and the courts. If slavery is assailed, he would leave its protection to the Judiciary and Executive, and if we want legislative interference we can always have it.

This new demand for intervention was a device to break down the Democratic party. While we have executive, judiciary, and Congress, we are safe. He would drive no man from the Democratic party who had fought free-soilers fifteen years. Douglas was not his choice for the Presidency—but he would support him sooner than any Opposition man in the United States. Douglas had been in error—but he is a bold, manly, truthful, independent patriot.

National issues:

Resolved, That the Administration of James Buchanan, elected at a crisis in which not only the traditional principles of Democratic govern ment, but the integrity of the Union itself, were threatened by powerful sectional combinations, has justified, by its action and by the wisdom and patriotism which have characterized its domestic and foreign policy, the choice of the Democracy and the verdict of the nation.

Resolved, That we approve and reiterate the principles laid down in the Cincinnati Platform as the true creed of the Democratic party, and that we deny the right of any power except the Democracy of the nation in Convention assembled, to add to or abridge this creed of the party.
